Twice have the people chosen him as their Rep resentative in Congress from the Second District of Iliinois, and twice did he acquit himself of that trust in a manner that won for him a warm spot in the hearts of his constituency. Twice has Mr. Harrison been called upon to fill the office of Mayor of Chicago with the highest Mayoralty vote ever given a De nocrat in this great city, and twice has he filled that office with honor, winning the respect and esteem of her people regardless of party. Carter H. Harrison is to-day the most popular man in the State of Illinois, a fact due to the zeal, the untiring energy, and the steadfastness of purpose displayed by that gentleman throughout his whole public life. The esteem and confidence of the people are his in the fullest sense-won by his unflinching adherence steadfast mien. That Mr. Harrison has at heart the interests of the community he represents will be readily seen by the following answer to a question asked by the writer, in a conversation lately held with Mr. H.: "I came to Chicago," said Mr. Harrison, "at a time when we were limited, comparatively speaking, in all but natural resources, but of them we had an unlimited supply. I saw that the city, and the State likewise, ought to increase-to become great in population and in wealth, and I told my confreres, and the people that it lay in our power to make the State rich, populous, powerful and great-a field for the emigrant who came to till our prairies, and for the capitalist who came to advance our mercantile, commercial and railroad inwith said creek northerly to a line drawn due west from | terests. Mr. Harrison is as yet in the prime of life-his physical qualities being fully equal to his mental capacities, and that is saying a great deal, the only medicine that gentleman ever used being the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. Speaking of that great panacea used by all great men of the day, Mr. Harrison said: "Rheumatism is about the only ailment that has ever given me any bother, and that is now gone where it will bother ple will have no other medicine for rheumatism or diseases of a similar nature than St. Jacobs Oil.

The writer, on his return to the office, took occasion to see how many great men of the day have been benefited by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, just out of curiosity. LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

DAZZLING PLACE-AN OLD STORY RE-TOLD-PATIENCE-ODETTE-THE BEST CIRCLES-VOORHIS' TRIALS-A PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY-THE BALL

Special Corresendence of THE EVENING STAR. NEW YORK, February 10th, 1882. The most fashionable bar-room in New York is owned and run by a murderer. It's an odd commentary on the loudly asserted improvement in the general tone of our society that the success of this murderer should be so instantaneous and can no longer be denied that the people of New York are crystalizing into a society which, without being as profligate as the French, or as exclusive his two hundred millions, cannot get into our best circles." It isn't so. The belief is that the sole of is Edward S. Stokes, who calmly, coolly and operations. A short time ago he came here and bought the Hoffman House. He built an entirely new bar-room, which is without doubt the most itizens who stand high among the city's men. lavish in its decorations, lewd in its statues and shows Faust asleep on a mountain top, with a score or more of nude women circling over his head. The vulgarity and utter recklessness for decency or decorum displayed in the postures of the most deprayed and hardened criminal. the female figures has never before been equalled here, and the crowd of men constantly before the picture attest its effect. Speaking of women brings to mind the third, and in many character in the Fiske murder-Josie Mansfield. That woman's career has been amazing. I will never forget how she used to drive down the box, her poodle by her side, and her hands and throat blazing in diamonds. She sat in her carriage in front of the Stock Exchange the day that Fiske and Gould caused the never-to-be-forgotten me no more. In the neighborhood where I live the peo- | went to Paris where she became the commonest of three in the tragedy the woman is the wreck; the | don of a French ball and didn't "go" a bit. victim is dead, and the murderer is alive and prothe improvement in the morals of New York.

> ago. It is still presented nightly at the Standard where it was first produced in this country; a new company is playing it at Haverly's Fourteenthstreet Theater; there is a burlesque at Tony Pastor's; the San Francisco Minstrels give their version, with a burnt-cork caste, and the Boston Ideal Opera Company, which came here on Monday, also have the piece in their repertoire. But there has been nothing in the esthetic line that has caused so much comment as the recent presentation of this opera by a coterie of fashionable society people at Chickering Hall for charity. Two performances were given with dazzling success. But t now appears that the young ladies of the company enjoyed playing the part of rapturous maidens, and the young men going through the evolutions of the heavy dragoons and singing their lusty songs, so much that they will not be content until they have given additional performances. A matinee on some afternoon this week has been talked of, and one of the leading members said the other day that a trip to Baltimore, and, perhaps, other cities, was in contemplation. In several respects the amateur performance was better than the professional. Unquestionably the voices were sweeter, and the singing almost without fault. Some of the young ladies, by their height and lack of plumpness were at a disadvantage. The esthetic dress, cut low in the neck, loose, and without sieeves, is pretty woman irresistibly fascinating. But a ware of an esthetic gown. This is one of the morals of the amateur performance. Nevertheless it was a memorable production, and those who will yet get an opportunity to see it may count

> The principal dramatic event of the week was the first performance of Sardou's new drama of Odette, the plot of which has already been given. As was expected, the house was crowded, and much interest and enthusiasm was manifested by the audience from first to last. The critics all agree that the play is a skillful piece of work, and that it is destined to claim public attention for some time to come. This fact aside, it is amusing to see how they cross each other—one calling a thing par excellent and another condemning it as altogether bad, and a third differing from both in the degree of praise or blame. One writer devoted himself almost entirely to a satirical discussion of the theme of the drama-"a facinating sinner-a glorious and melting creature-a beautiful animal who goes straight to the devil." This critic, after deploring the fact that Sardou, with his brilliant and highly trained intellect, should treat such a subject, says that the piece is tersely and trenchantly written with his usual skill and more than his usual feeling. As for the lesson it is "the beatitude of glorious feminine wickedness. The first act is pronounced spirited to an extreme degree and well rounded out, and the interest is said to accumulate as the play proceeds. Another writer begins by raising the cry of plagiarism. Odette, he says, is very like Mario Arshard's novel and play of La Flammina, and is in short, nothing more than a remodelling of that work. Then he says the problem to be solved has the merit of a good idea, and has hardly been viewed before from a serious dramatic standpoint. Going on he finds justification for Mr. Sardou in the fact that the play is thoroughly interesting, adding that whatever interests the public has a certain value beyond criticism. He finds Sardou's strength in his ability to make so much out of a little-to arouse so much interest out of what is in itself futile and vague. But the effect of this praise of the author's artistic skill is spoiled by the declaration that a subtraction might be made of the whole of the third act, and, indeed, of the first two acts, and that nearly all of the characters were not related to the vital action of the drams. A third critic puts his opinion laconically, saying that if Odette is not edilying it is at least entertaining. The drama is well constructed, he says, and is picturesque and forcible in treatment. However, if the attendance since Monday night and the reception of each performance by the audience may form a

> THE BEST CIRCLES. The "best circles" are in a most unusual uproar just now over the revelations of a very bland and audacious gentleman, signing himself "Andrew J. Rowe, No. 125 Breadway," who has made public the antecedents of the well-known Brevoort family. The Brevoorts in New York are-the Brevoorts. No one is permitted to question their social standing, and they trace their descendants for centuries back till they reach royal blood. They are exclusive and are worshiped by many of the younger families because of their alleged blue blood. It therefore caused a commetion when the bland Mr. Rowe rushed into print with a letter in which he says that he got the following facts from the official records of the county clerk's office:-That the Brevoorts were farmers, and on January 7th, 1784, Henry Brevoort, the father of them all, divided his farm among Abraham Brevoort, baker; Henry Brevoort, wheelwright; Elias Brevoort, blacksmith; Isaac Brevoort, saddler, and David Lawrence, (husband of Jemina Brevoort), tailor! This is almost too much for swell New York, which looks upon trade as a disgrace, and the fact that its most aristocratic family consisted of a baker, wheelwright, blacksmith, saddler and tailor, is an uncommonly hard pill to swallow. VOORHIS' TRIALS. "I have grown fifteen years older since the beginning of my troubles," said ex-Congressman Voorhis yesterday.

The conversation took place in the little courthouse at Hackensack, a picturesque summer place in New Jersey. He does indeed look a great deal older. His hair is much grayer than it was when I last saw him about a year and a half ago. The occasion of his being in court was that he was the defendant in a case of alleged theft of $5.00 in bonds belonging to an old-resident of the village familiarly known as "Uncle Jake." What became of the old man's bonds no one seems to know. "Well, you have had a good deal to go through,"

said

"This trial, you know," he replied, "is only one of several, and thank God it is the last! I was in Congress when people began to cry 'thief' at me; and the republican committee here went so far as to ask me to resign. This I refused to do, and I served out my term. But my position in Congress was decidedly unpleasant. You can see how it was. Some of the members shunned me because they feared I might be guilty of the charges against me; others kept aloof because they thought if I was innocent the subject would be painful. But I stuck it through.

"You made an assignment, did you not?"
"Of everything, the old homestead, and even property in my wife's name. Well, I have gone through one trial after another, and the verdict each time has been for acquittal." "What do you expect the result will be this time?" I asked. The jury had left their seats and were trying to come to an agreement under lock

"Acquittal."
"But if it should be 'found guilty.'"
"We should try to get a new trial. I propose to fight this case as long as I have a hair on my head."

When I left the handsome ex-Congressman he was pacing nervously up and down before the judge's bench waiting for the twelve men to return rom the jury room.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY.

Sindram, the murderer, who was to have put on the black cap to-day, has secured a stay of proceedings for one month. If one is to believe his declarations and to judge from his manner, he cares much less for this legal victory than his lawyer. From the first this singular man has been a psychological problem for philosophers and a profound mystery to the masses. I saw him yester day for the first time in the lower corridor of the Tombs, and must say that he had a very different complete. I often hear men say: "Yes, the fact look from what I had imagined. The letters he wrote to the district attorney, forming perhaps the most remarkable criminal literature ever writ ten, would naturally lead to the belief that he had a head and face of the lowest animal type. But as the English, will have the best features of both. on the contrary there is nothing brutal looking Money has not the sway it used to have. Jay about him, his features being regular and fairly Gould, with all his wealth, and Vanderbilt, with well cut, and his eye bright and intelligent. The murderer I speak ing to phrenologists, that his animal instincts are greatly in excess of his intellectual and moral faculties. The position, which he has held all along, deliberately murdered Fiske in the Grand Central | that he would rather die on the gallows than serve hotel. THE BALL SEASON. There have been three rousing big balls this week, as there were last, and they were just as remarkable. The first, "The Elks," was the most respects the most famous, or infamous, talked of, because it is given by a society that claims all the prominent actors of the country as its members. No end of expense was incurred, Broadway in the afternoons, lolling in a magnifi- and the papers the next day contained the usual cent barouche, with coachman and footman on cast-iron reports of its success, but the ball was unquestionably a dismal failure. The decorations were very fine, and the grand procession, with heralds and kings, a car drawn by six alleged baby elephants surmounted by an immense elk's head, Black Friday. After the sentence of Stokes she four wooden locomotives and no end of brilliant costumes was a stunning feature, but the ball to an proffigate women. A young man and his sweetheart can't take a trot without being talked about, when there is a mystery in the case. The young lady is a beautiful blonde with deep blue eyes and shining hair, and presents a fine figure in her green riding habit and glossy silk hat. If appearances go for anything, her com-panion is an English groom. He is broad-shouldered, has brown chop-whiskers and a blooming complexion-unmistakably British. When they get into secluded parts of the road it is easy to see that they are lovers. Recently a young English girl of good family ran away with her father's groom, and the question is whether the runaway maiden and her companion are not these self-same | Pennsylvania; J. L. A Wife's Disappearance. A SENSATION IN A VIRGINIA TOWN-A LETTER FOUND

IN THE ROAD. The disappearance of a lady in Alleghany county, Va., of the highest social position, under the most mysterious circumstances, has created intense excitement in that county. The particubecoming to a well rounded figure, and makes a lars are these: Monday evening Mrs. William M. Hughes, a lady of position and of culture, left her woman without these natural charms should be- home in Alleghany county, about seven miles northeast of Alleghany Station, with the design of visiting a neighbor several miles distant. As she did not return at a reasonable hour in the evening, her husband started along the road she had taken in search of her. Reaching the foot of Chestnut mountain, where the road forks, his feelings may better be imagined than described when he discovered a quantity of yarn, which his wife had taken with her, to be spun, fastened to the standard of an abandoned wagen. Accompanying it was this missive: "You will not see me any more. I hope God will take care of our little family, and trust that I may meet them in heaven. Good-bye." There is absolutely nothing to throw a ray of light upon the mystery. Mrs. Hughes had reached her neighbor's house, whence she had departed after ttaining the object of her visit. She had started home early in the morning, and nothing at all unusual had been observed in her conduct. She was cheerful and pleasant, according to her wont. The husband, half distracted, returned to his home. The alarm spread, and in a little while a band of neighbors was scouring the mountains Their blazing torches illuminated the darkness as they hunted every defile for miles around for traces of the missing woman. The search availed nothing and it was abandoned. The inexplicable disappearance, under such circumstances, of a lady of Mrs. Hughes' character and position in society, has of course deeply agitated the whole community. The lady was a native of Fluvanna. where the family connections are numerous and respectable. She was a woman of education and refinement. Her household was one of the pleasantest in the county-no jarring or discord. She was manifestly happy in the relation which has been so suddenly and mysteriously sundered There was a heavy fall of snow on the night of her disappearance, and if she by any chance was alone and unaided on the mountains during that terrible night, every likelihood is that her body now lies beneath the snow.

SOTELDO SHOOTING. WILL OF THE LATE WILLIAM ORME.

LETTER FROM MRS. GARFIELD. TENNESSEE BONDS IN WALL STREET.

The Barton-Soteldo Shooting.

SOTELDO'S CONDITION UNCHANGED AT 2 P. M. When a STAR reporter called at the Providence Hospital at 2 o'clock this afternoon he was informed by the sister in charge that no one was permitted to see Mr. Soteldo. When asked about his condition she said: "He is about the same-a little brighter than yesterday, for the shock has "There is no hope for him?" inquired the re-"No. I don't think there is a shadow of hope." A curiosity among Senators is Henry G. Davis, now nearly sixty years of age. While he was a boy the Baltimore and Ohio railroad came up the when he was discharged from his father's farm They made him a brakesman for a while, and then he developed into a conductor, and stayed with the road nearly till the time of the John Brown raid. Affable, particular, very fond of at Piedmont, at the foot of the Alleghany mountains, a wild mining town, and varied the bustness by getting out some coal. A bank is the reginia, in which his railroad had an especial interest. Virginia had obstructed the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in her palmy days, and when she went out of the Union and a state seceded come right up to the Baltimore and Ohio crossthis railroad on old Virginia soil. It jumps from Maryland into West Virginia. Mr. Davis also recoved into the new state, and began to get out lumber and buy new coal mines not much now considered on the democratic side the most useful men to know. Mr. S.B.
